Significant Research Project

Freedom beyond the Border: A Critical Analysis of Afghan Female Refugees' Perception of Freedom Following Forced Migration in Denmark

- Investigated post-migration transformations of Afghan female refugees in Denmark using intersectionality, social dominance theory, and empowerment frameworks.
- Evaluated how the customary laws and practices contribute to forced early marriages of teenage girls within the community.
- Explored the impact of social dominance on the mental well-being of Afghan teenage girls, highlighting the struggles they encounter in aligning with societal expectations.
- Critically analyzed how they are ‘empowered' through the asylum granted based on their 'gender'.
- Provided practical recommendations for actions at both the community and policy levels.

Factors affecting the Use of Formal Health Care of Chattogram Hill-Tracts people: A case study of Indigenous Marma and Bengali people living in Lama Sadar, Bandarban

- Explored the barriers to accessing formal healthcare for the two indigenous communities (Bengali and Marma) through a survey-based study.
- Identified 'socioeconomic' status and 'gender' as key factors affecting formal healthcare access, leading to a higher reliance on informal or no healthcare, using the cost-benefit and out-of-pocket expenditure model.
- Designed a community-focused awareness program for the health ministry targeting the reduction of informal healthcare usage and out-of-pocket expenditures.
